A SEAT AT THE TABLE
"If they don't give you a seat at the table, bring a folding chair."
What does it mean to be inclusive in a democracy? Who gets to decide whose voices are heard and whose are ignored? Who can serve as an agent of change? Is the work of inclusion ever done?
A Seat at the Table explores these questions by following Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm's fight for inclusion in the political process.
Throughout its history, people in the United States have acted as agents of inclusivity and fought to ensure that distinct voices are heard by those in power. Some, like Rep. Shirley Chisholm, sprang from the same marginalized groups that they later brought to the table. Others have used their privilege and power to advocate for those without seats.
In keeping with Rep. Shirley Chisholm's famous quote, A Seat at the Table explores how people make democracy more inclusive.

5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT, REPORTER

Ahead of the midterms, I've noticed that more women and minorities seem to be running for Congress. They're demanding their seat at the table, some would say — a reference to Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm, who in 1968 became the first black woman elected to Congress. Now, Chisholm's words, paired with our unique political climate, have inspired a new project out of Boston's Kennedy Institute. Read more about how this Seat at the Table project will highlight the importance of a representation in democracy inside and at metroboston.us.

1 TRUMP: SAUDIS STAGED 'WORST COVER-UP EVER'

President Donald Trump said on Tuesday Saudi authorities staged the "worst cover-up ever" in the killing of prominent journalist Jamal Khashoggi this month, as the United States vowed to revoke visas of some of those believed to be responsible. Trump spoke hours after Turkey's president, Tayyip Erdogan, dismissed Saudi efforts to blame Khashoggi's death on rogue operatives. Erdogan urged Riyadh to search "from top to bottom" to uncover those behind Khashoggi's death in the Saudi consulate in Istanbul on Oct. 2, an incident that has prompted global outrage and strained relations between Riyadh and Washington. Asked by a reporter how the Khashoggi killing could have happened, Trump said: "They had a very bad original concept. It was carried out poorly, and the cover-up was one of the worst in the history of cover-ups." Trump's comments have ranged from threatening Saudi Arabia with "very severe" consequences and mentioning possible economic sanctions, to more conciliatory remarks highlighting the country's role as an ally against Iran and Islamist militants.

2 BOLTON: WE'LL QUIT ARMS CONTROL TREATY

Washington will press ahead with a plan to quit a landmark nuclear arms control pact despite objections from Russia and some European countries, senior U.S. official John Bolton said on Tuesday, after meeting Russian President Vladimir Putin. Bolton had a 90-minute meeting in the Kremlin with Putin that resulted in an agreement for the Russian leader to hold talks with President Donald Trump in Paris next month, their first meeting since a July summit in Helsinki. But the Moscow talks appeared to yield no breakthrough over Trump's stated desire for Washington to leave the Intermediate-Range Nuclear Forces (INF), a step Moscow has decried as dangerous and many European countries have warned could reignite a Cold War-style arms race. "There's a new strategic reality out there," Bolton told a news conference, adding that the Cold War-era treaty did not address new missile threats from countries such as China, Iran and North Korea, and was therefore redundant. "In terms of filing the formal notice of withdrawal, that has not been filed but it will be filed in due course," he said.

3 WORLD'S LONGEST SEA BRIDGE OPENS BETWEEN HONG KONG AND CHINA

An evening view of the Hong Kong-Zhuhai-Macau bridge and its entrances to a cross-sea tunnel on Tuesday in Hong Kong. The world's longest sea bridge, which spans 34 miles, linking the cities of Hong Kong, Macau, and Zhuhai on China's southern coast of Guangdong province, is set to open this week as part of Beijing's plan to merge 11 cities in its southern region into one megalopolis. China's president Xi Jinping attended the official opening on Tuesday as the bridge is set to start operation on Wednesday, after nine years in the making.

4 MEXICAN RESORT ON PACIFIC BRACES FOR WILLA

Thousands of people were evacuated, buildings were boarded up and schools closed on Mexico's Pacific coast on Tuesday as Hurricane Willa threatened to pummel tourist resorts with high winds and heavy rains. Residents had sealed windows and doors with wooden planks on hotels facing the historic downtown boardwalk of Mazatlan, a popular coastal city in the northwestern state of Sinaloa. Willa, which weakened to a Category 3 on the five-step Saffir-Simpson scale on Tuesday morning, was blowing maximum sustained winds of about 120 miles per hour (193 kph) with higher gusts, the Miami-based National Hurricane Center said. It had reached rare Category 5 status on Monday with winds near 160 mph (260 kph) before weakening. Forecast to be one of the most powerful hurricanes to enter Mexico from the Pacific in recent years, Willa was due to weaken further before striking the land Tuesday evening. On Tuesday afternoon the storm was about 105 miles south-southwest of Mazatlan, the hurricane center said.

5 DC PROSECUTORS OPEN PROBE OF ARCHDIOCESE

The District of Columbia has opened a civil investigation into whether the Archdiocese of Washington covered up sexual abuse of minors by Catholic clergy, the D.C. attorney general told local elected officials on Tuesday. At least 13 states and the District of Columbia are conducting civil or criminal investigations into allegations of sexual misconduct or cover-up by the Catholic Church, Attorney General Karl Racine said, according to his office. The Roman Catholic Church has been enmeshed in a sex abuse scandal that has enveloped clergy in a number of countries, including the United States, Germany, Chile, Australia and Ireland. In August, Pope Francis issued an unprecedented letter to all Catholics vowing that there would be no more cover-ups of sexual abuse by clergy. The former archbishop of Washington, Theodore McCarrick, 88, resigned from the College of Cardinals in July. He has denied allegations that he sexually abused a 16-year-old boy in the early 1970s when he was a priest in New York. Church officials have deemed the accusations credible.

Kennedy's Seat at the Table project highlights importance of inclusion

The Seat at the Table project gets people talking about the importance of diverse representation in our democracy.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT
kristin.toussaint@metro.us

"If they don't give you a seat at the table, bring a folding chair." Those iconic words by fomer Congresswoman Shirley Chisholm (D-NY) have inspired thousands to charge into politics, and now, they've inspired an exhibit and project out of the Edward M. Kennedy Institute for the United States Senate.

Through the Seat at the Table project, the Kennedy Institute will connect with visitors, schools and youth-focused organizations across the commonwealth to talk about the importance of diversity in democracy.

To launch the project, the Institute recently unveiled its Seat at the Table exhibit, which features a table surrounded by large wooden chairs. There's one yellow folding chair at the table, on which a spotlight shines.

Though the project and exhibit are largely inspired by Chisholm's words, they also come at a crucial point in the country's political landscape, said Kennedy Institute President Mary K. Grant.

"This time we're in, different individuals and more women are stepping up, coming into the forefront and saying, 'My voice matters, I can make a difference,'" she said. "It's not only about what's happening right now as we're heading into the midterms, but for us it's what has been happening leading up to this point, and then what happens the day after midterms? The next generation of leaders really recognizes that if there isn't a seat at the table, they have to make one."

"... More women are stepping up, coming into the forefront and saying, 'My voice matters, I can make a difference.'"

Mary K. Grant,
Kennedy Institute president

Though the Kennedy Institute educates the public on the Senate (and includes a full-scale reproduction of the U.S. Senate chamber inside its Morrissey Boulevard address), it really aims to go beyond that, Grant said, to teach people about how the government works in general.

Through the Seat at the Table project, school groups and community organizations (including some Boston Public Schools, the Boston Children's Museum, the Boston International Newcomers Academy and more) will create and design their own folding chairs, which will be displayed on rotation at the Institute. While creating them, they'll talk about what representation means as well as what it takes to be a leader.

This effort goes beyond the usual political messages ahead of an election, Grant said, which focus on getting out to vote. The Kennedy Institute cares about that too, of course, but the concept of getting a seat speaks to the bigger picture of politics.

"This is about more than just one election," she said. "It's really about recognizing the changes happening across our country within our democracy, the emerging leaders that we need to fill the next leadership pipeline and helping the next generation understand the different pathways to leadership."

We know Chisholm got her seat at the table, Grant said, but what we might not know is how difficult the road to that seat can be.

Red Sox 'Beat LA' shirts to benefit Boston homeless during World Series

Officials unveil the partnership with Modell's Sporting Goods and detail security efforts ahead of the Fall Classic.

KRISTIN TOUSSAINT

With the World Series beginning in Boston, many Red Sox fans are sure to be chanting "Beat L.A." Now, they can wear the sentiment on a shirt while helping to end homelessness in the city.

Mitch Modell, CEO of Modell's Sporting Goods, unveiled "Beat L.A." Red Sox shirts alongside Mayor Marty Walsh on Tuesday. The shirts will be sold at Modell's Sporting Goods locations in New England with $1 of every sale going to Boston's Way Home Fund, a city partnership with Pine Street Inn that aims to end chronic homelessness in Boston.

"We have 'Beat LA' T-shirts, and we want to beat homelessness at the same time," Modell said.

Since 2015, the Way Home effort has housed 850 chronically homeless veterans, as well as more than 1,800 other chronically homeless individuals in Boston.

On Tuesday, along with voicing their hopes that the Red Sox beat the Dodgers, city officials also spoke to security efforts ahead of the World Series games.

"The Red Sox catch phrase this year is 'do damage,'" Walsh said. "That's for the players in the field and not the fans on the street, I want to be very clear about that."

Games 1 and 2 of the World Series will be at Fenway Park before the Red Sox head to Los Angeles for Friday's game.

The Boston Police Department has increased security in and around Fenway Park for the World Series games, BPD Commissioner William Gross said, and ensured that Boston neighborhoods will be fully staffed with officers, as well. There are no credible threats at this time, Gross said, and city law enforcement will be coordinating with federal agencies throughout the World Series.

Officials are reminding fans that they will not tolerate public drinking, disorderly conduct or people climbing on buildings and other infrastructure either during the games or in any celebrations afterward.

"I want to address the fans directly," Walsh said. "Have fun, cheer and celebrate, be passionate Boston sports fans, but be responsible. Let's not put a cloud over the great memory here in our city that's going to be happening over the next seven to 10 days."

"Have fun, cheer and celebrate, be passionate Boston sports fans, but be responsible."

Mayor Marty Walsh

Police met with schools throughout Boston this week to deliver the same message specifically to college students, as well.

The Boston Police Department is also warning fans to be wary of counterfeit tickets being sold ahead of the World Series games.

"We're in the age of computers, so they're going to look real and feel real," said Gross, "but then you will be turned away at the gates because they're counterfeit. Make sure to buy tickets at reputable agencies."

Feast on fried chicken sandwiches, bites and more at the new Fuku Boston. FUKU

Get your fried chicken fix at Fuku Boston

Local foodies are getting pretty spoiled as another popular fast-casual chain has popped up in the Seaport. Fuku Boston has finally opened up shop, and the acclaimed fried chicken joint by Momofuku chef and "Ugly Delicious" star David Chang is ready to serve up some great grub in the Hub. Here's everything you need to know.

Fuku Boston is now open in the Seaport. EMILY KAN

What's on the menu?

According to executive chef Stephanie Abrams, Fuku stands apart from other fast-casual spots because the brand, first and foremost, focuses on having fun with its menu.

"When you think about it, almost all of our food is meant to be eaten with your hands instead of ustensils, and we also have several items that are meant to be shared," Abrams tells Metro. "Fuku isn't just a great place for a quick lunch — it's also a destination for groups to enjoy a fun and casual meal."

The star of the menu is, of course, Fuku's array of fried chicken offerings, which are available as bites and crispy chicken breast fingers, as well as plenty of sandwich options, which you can customize with a variety of toppings and sauces. There are all sorts of great fried chicken sandwiches to try, including the spicy version made with habanero chicken thighs, plus the fan-favorite knockout, featuring seasoned cabbage and Fuku's delicious knockout sauce.

There's also a special fried chicken sandwich created for the Fuku Boston location, appropriately called the Bos, made with fried squash rings, ranch and topped with a spicy glaze.

"We wanted to create something unique and Boston specific," Abrams says. "We did a pop-up last month with Boston favorite Little Donkey, and some of the ingredients that they were working with in their kitchen, we were also already playing around with ourselves, including ranch, hot sauce and squash. I thought the combination would be the perfect nod to Boston, and something special to celebrate."

The Bos fried chicken sandwich. FUKU

Aside from the fried chicken offerings, Fuku Boston guests can munch on lighter fare like the citrus spinach salad or the harvest kale salad, or fill up on sides like the tasty mac salad. There's also the behemoth known as the loaded fries, which are topped with cheese sauce, scallions, ranch and bacon. Abrams notes that they "are huge, " served on a large tray and "are meant to be shared by a group."

"Our menu is a blend of core and seasonal items. We want to provide consistently great chicken but also keep our guests excited and engaged with seasonal and limited menu items," says Abrams. "Ideally, someone should be able to come in and get the spicy fried chicken sandwich or Fuku fingers they've grown to love, but also be surprised by new menu items they discover upon return visits."

The hidden gem of the menu, according to the executive chef, are the wings, which are seasoned with a special five-spice blend. "I think that the five-spice dry seasoning blend we make is special and unique, and really takes the flavor of our fried chicken up an extra notch," says Abrams.

Don't forget to order something to sip at Fuku Boston. There are blood orange and strawberry lemonade slushies, as well as a variety of teas and lemonade.

Where is it?

Fuku Boston is located at 43 Northern Ave. in the Seaport District. It'll be open everyday for lunch and dinner, from 11 a.m.-9 p.m. For more information, check out eatfuku.com. MATT JUUL

Why making 'Mid90s' was a dream come true for Jonah Hill

The actor-turned-director says the first day of filming was the "best moment" of his life.

MATT JUUL
matthew.juul@metro.us

Jonah Hill never really dreamed of being a comedy star or an Oscar-nominated actor, and he certainly never could've imagined becoming a style icon beloved by Instagram users. Instead, Hill always wanted to be behind the camera, a goal he finally got to achieve with his directorial debut "Mid90s."

The 34-year-old star, who wrote and directed the coming-of-age tale, felt nothing but unbridled joy as he worked on the project, as it was truly a dream come true.

"As an actor, you're a very important color in someone else's painting, and I've been a pretty good green for a long time — and I like being a pretty good green," Hill tells Metro. "But it was my dream to get to paint my own painting."

As the title suggests, the film is set in the '90s and centers around Stevie (Sunny Suljic), a 13-year-old boy who's trying to find his place in the world and grows up a little too quickly after befriending a group of older teens. Stevie and company bond over their mutual love of skateboarding, a pastime they use to escape the horrors of their family lives.

According to the cast of relative newcomers, Suljic and the other young actors featured in "Mid90s" felt extremely comfortable working under Hill, who did everything in his power to make them feel at home. Ryder McLaughlin, who plays the quiet videographer of the group nicknamed Fourth Grade, compared their relationship with Hill to that of "good friends," as he would often offer them advice on everything from navigating publicity to "girl problems."

"It felt like he's always been a director," says McLaughlin. "It didn't feel like a new thing for him."

"The times I've given my best performances is when I trusted the filmmaker the most," says Hill. "All I knew was I had to spend as much time as I could before we started shooting understanding that I need to let these people know that I have their back. I would rather die than embarrass them."

While "Mid90s" marks Hill's first turn in the director's chair for a feature film, he's effectively been in film school under the tutelage of Hollywood's best filmmakers throughout his career as an actor, working with the likes of Martin Scorsese, Quentin Tarantino, Judd Apatow and the Coen brothers, just to name a few. So it's no surprise that Hill was excited and filled with "bliss," rather than nervous or surprised, when he finally got to the set on the first day of filming.

"I've been in so many scenes in so many movies over the years, that to me, it was just pure excitement," Hill says. "I always say to anyone in the film business or anyone starting out in the film business, 'It's not real until you pull up and the trucks are there.'

"Because everything before that, they didn't pour a bunch of money into, so once the trucks are there, you at least get one day to shoot," he adds. "When I pulled up and I saw the trucks, that was probably the best moment of my life."

Washing Machine

Although it may seem a bit unnecessary to have an intelligent washing machine at home, they already exist. Their main function is to allow the user to manage and monitor the cycles; for example, the Samsung F900 Washing Machine lets you remotely control and monitor your washing from anywhere using a smartphone app. You can instantly start or pause it and monitor cycle selections, remaining time and finishing alerts.

Refrigerator

There are many popular options, such as the LG InstaView ThinQ, which works with Amazon Alexa, so you can purchase products, play music, check weather, create shopping lists, manage your calendar and more via voice commands. Also you can use the 29" HD transparent LCD touch-screen to set food-expiration dates, upload photos, leave notes for your family and more.

DraftKings dominating new sportsbook market

The Boston-based company is at the forefront of the sports betting industry.

MATT BURKE
matthew.burke@metro.us

DraftKings is winning the sports betting race in New Jersey so far as it made around $8 million in the month of September, a 186 percent increase from the month of August, when it made $2.96 million. Its next closest competitor was FanDuel, which made $2.8 million in the month of September. SugarHouse came in third during the first month of the NFL season with $619,030 in revenue.

DraftKings was the first to partner with a physical casino in New Jersey (Resorts Casino) back in early August, and was subsequently the first to launch an online sportsbook. Being first to market has paid off substantially for DraftKings, and that, combined with the daily fantasy sports infrastructure it had in place, has the company in prime position in the budding sports betting market in the United States.

"Our short-term goals included being the first to launch in New Jersey. We also wanted to have the most compelling digital platform and I think we've had great results with what we think is the best product," DraftKings CRO and co-founder Matt Kalish said in an exclusive interview with MetroBet. "So we've already met some of our short-term goals. We're two-and-a-half months in, and we're excited to see continued momentum in growing our user base. We're now six weeks into the NFL season and we're really hitting our stride."

DraftKings' sportsbook site is as slick as it gets, as we highlighted in our MetroBet review, and it mirrors a lot of what made the company's DFS site so successful.

"We were working on the sportsbook for almost a year ahead of time, well ahead of most" Kalish told MetroBet. "We built things up from scratch with our daily fantasy model. We didn't copy Europe (which already had online sportsbooks in place). We designed our own sportsbook that's easy to use for the sports betting beginner. For instance, when you first sign in it will literally say, for example, "Do you want the Red Sox or Yankees to win?" The mobile really feels good because it's built native. We have had a great experience for existing fantasy players crossing over to betting."

What's next?

The online sportsbooks in New Jersey are also racing to have the most unique prop bets and parlay options available. Innovation in the online sports betting world, as DraftKings CEO Jason Robins told us in September, is going to be key moving forward.

DraftKings CRO and co-founder Matt Kalish. GETTY IMAGES

DraftKings has already installed a feature called "Cash Out," which is available for pre-game, live, future and parlay bets. It can be for "more or less than your original wagered amount, depending on how events unfold following your bet placement." In other words, if you're afraid you're going to lose big on a bet, you can cut your losses before the outcome is decided and save some face.

"We have the most sports available to bet on, the most availability, and live in-game betting," Kalish told MetroBet. "Features like Cash Out, all of these are on the cutting edge. No one is going to have a richer feature set."

As far as expansion to more states goes, Kalish is optimistic that DraftKings' home state of Massachusetts will be among the first states to have sports betting legalization in the United States.

"I think Massachusetts will be one of the earliest states," Kalish told MetroBet. "A lot of the northeast states will be the fastest moving. We're based in Mass. We will love to see that market become legal. It would be great for us on several levels, including it will enable us to do the job hiring in our home state. There are a lot of benefits in Mass., and we're optimistic it will happen in 2019."
